Not impressed

By francophile97

I have been required to use this series for the past two years and if given the choice in the future, would not select to use it again. Though this series has a ton of resources (which Vista touts), many of these resources are inaccessible to middle-school and high-school students beginning language study. Chapters are divided into Lecon A and Lecon B and present too many words, half of which are just listed out to the side at the beginning of the chapter. Random words and expressions are thrown in that are not high-frequency vocab words and many high-frequency vocab words are not included in early themes. There are also output (speaking and writing activities) that are too difficult/unrealistic and not narrow enough for most novice learners. Gramatically, entire paradigms are often introduced in lower levels. Activities often require students to think about and apply multiple rules (which is too much for novice learners to attend to, when they should be mastering the basics). Additionally, grammatical structures do not necessarily complement the themes of the chapters they are used with. The way the series is set up is that there are 2 larger concepts per lecon/4 total per chapter, but there are a lot of other smaller grammatical concepts included in the presentation of larger concepts. Video series is good; native speakers speak at a pace that is much more accessible to novice learners. As a communication-oriented teacher, I have found this series very difficult to work with. By the end of level 2, all tenses (including pluperfect, present and past subjunctive) are presented. Cultural articles are not that interesting and use a lot of complicated syntax and vocabulary for novice learners. Overall, activities emphasize too many discrete points; so, students lose the point of the communicative goals of many activities altogether.

Great starter book for self-study

By rapidtraveler

Everything I could need. Would love to have the workbook and supplemental materials, but for $1, I got this at a steal (used).
